President’s Message

Our children are the most important asset this country has. They are our future! They are our dreams for what can be achieved! They are a huge part of the footprint we will leave in the history books! PTA has adopted the vision that we will make every child’s potential a reality. In order to make this happen, we as parents, teachers, administrators, and community members must make sure that we are doing everything we can to ensure that these children are provided the best possible start towards adulthood.

In order for this to happen, we must start forming long lasting partnerships between our families, schools and communities. Every day we let this type of partnership slide by undeveloped is another day we are letting down the children in our lives. These partnerships must be based on meaningful understanding and respect of each group’s views and expectations. Without this, we are on a course that will only travel blindly and never accomplish our goal.

PTA has developed a road map for us to follow as we work towards developing these great assets. This is the National Standards for Family-School Partnerships. We must understand this road map with all of its twists and turns and stops along the way if we are to start this journey with our children. Please look over this map to our children’s success with suggestions for activities along the way.

Just who is the National PTA President Elect?

Charles J. “Chuck” Saylors is PTA’s first-ever male national president-elect. He was elected in June 2007 to a two-year term and has been a PTA member for almost 20 years.

Saylors joined PTA when his oldest son Matthew (now 24 years old) was in the first grade at Woodland Elementary in Greer, S.C. That’s when he and his wife Teresa began volunteering and they haven’t slowed down since.

The Saylors have been married for 25 years and have four children; Matthew, Jennifer Canova (22), Tyler (12) and William (9). They are also the proud grandparents of Bethany Canova (2), Jennifer’s daughter. Teresa is a past PTA president at Taylors Elementary where Tyler and William are students.

Saylors states: “My motivation is to get parents and family members involved in the educational system showing them that even a little time spent in the school is a valuable investment. I truly believe that a child will succeed if a parent is involved.”

Saylors has been in the construction industry for over 17 years and is currently Vice President for the Construction Management Division of M.B. Kahn Construction, a national top 10 education contractor. Saylors also serves on a number of national, state, and community boards. He is a trustee for the School District of Greenville County, S.C., serving two years as board chair and is a former board member for Greenville Technical College.

Connecting: To the Internet, to Parents, to Children

By Jan Harp Domene, PTA National President

Kids and technology both grow quickly, don’t they? The members of Generation X are parents now, and their children have even surpassed them as the most tech-savvy group. While trying to keep up with their own offspring, many of these moms and dads are also finding that their household needs two or more jobs to support their family. Tough economic times are taking a toll on volunteer commitments; we shouldn’t be surprised that Gen X doesn’t have as much time for regular PTA meetings as their parents did. Yet parent involvement remains an important part of their lives. PTA simply needs to engage these younger parents in new ways, and Gen X’s familiarity with technology is how we can connect with them.

PTA’s national website is now more parent-friendly. We also created a new on-demand radio station with shows featuring experts on education and family issues; jumped into online social networking (reaching out to parents through Facebook® and talking with them on blogs); set up a PTA channel on YouTube; and started sharing photos on Fotki. And that’s just the beginning!

Parents aren’t the only ones online, though. Young people and children are using the Internet in greater numbers and in different ways than their elders. The communication avenues and learning opportunities available online are amazing, and we must make certain that our children can explore those enriching possibilities safely. PTA.org offers a special section devoted to Internet safety, as do partners like the White House Office of National Drug Control Policy, who have a great media safety primer for parents at www.theantidrug.com/teens-technology.

Generation after generation, PTA serves as a valuable and vital resource. Our mission transcends age and the ages: we bring families, schools, and communities together to help all children succeed. Now we’re just doing it in ways our founders had never imagined. And you will be the next generation of PTA leaders who connect with communities in ways we can only imagine. Dream on, PTA—and never be afraid to try something new!
“Drive Safe, Sober and Buckled Up” is the message MADD strives to reinforce through the annual Tie One On For Safety program every November and December. This popular public awareness campaign purposely spotlights the time of year when a greater proportion of people are actively engaging in holiday season festivities. It only takes a split second for a drunk driver to dramatically change individual’s and family’s lives. Each year MADD offices across the country distribute over 6 million ribbons for individuals to display on their vehicle. For more information about this program point your browser to http://www.madd.org/Drunk-Driving/Drunk-Driving/Programs/View-Program.aspx?program=10.

Founder’s Day
Have you made plans to celebrate Founder’s Day on February 17th? The PTA has been a driving force in childhood advocacy for over 100 years. Our founders, Phoebe Apperson Hearst, Selena Sloan Butler, and Alice McLellan Birney took a vision and changed it into a reality. Can you imagine what our schools would be like today if these women and those who followed in their footsteps had simply looked in the other direction? Use this time to plan a special event to honor our history and your own accomplishments. Our history is impressive but we have only just begun. The work we do today enhances children’s tomorrows.

Missouri Connections News Room
Available

The Missouri Connections News Room is a new Parent Resource available on the Missouri PTA website, www.mopta.org. It contains a series of monthly articles, fact sheets, and graphs that provides Missouri parents, their students, educators and the general public with important education and career planning information. The Missouri Connections News Room is a collaborative project by the state Departments of Elementary and Secondary Education, Higher Education, and Economic Development, as well as the Missouri Center for Career Education and the Missouri Chamber of Commerce and Industry. In fact, its public outreach workgroup encourages PTA members and schools to tap this free news source, as needed, for use in your local communications. The ultimate goal of the News Room is to provide information that may stimulate interest in life-long career preparation and help Missourians be armed with education and skills needed to be competitive and prosperous throughout their careers.

Over three years ago, a member of Missouri PTA decided to bring forth an idea. An idea that would work its way through the legislative system and help bring about House Bill Number 2213. A bill that was delivered and approved by Governor Matt Blunt on June 6, 2008 and signed by the same on September 10, 2008.

HB2213 will amend chapter 9 RSMo by adding a new section relating to the designation of parent and family involvement in education week. It states:

The governor shall annually issue a proclamation setting apart the second week of September as “Parent and Family Involvement in Education Week,” and recommending to the people of the state that the week be appropriately observed through activities that will bring about an increased awareness of the importance and benefits of parent and family involvement in education and encourage greater involvement of parents and families in their children’s education, both in the school and in the home.

Darrell played a very large role in getting this bill approved. For those who do not know him, Darrell is the retired President of the Missouri PTA. Darrell played a very large role in getting this Bill approved.

On hand to witness the signing and official Proclamation were a group of people that have the children of Missouri in their hearts. Representatives from Missouri PTA were: Mary Oyler, president, Wendy Jackson, president elect, Stephanie Miller, state legislative chair, Elizabeth Aley, regional director from the Ozark Region, and Stephanie Hicks, unit president from Jefferson City. Representatives from Parent Involvement Resource Center, Parents as Teachers, Practical Parenting Partnership and L.I.F.T (Missouri Literacy Resource Center) also joined our group. Last, but definitely not least of those on hand, was Darrell Swofford.

Parent and family involvement plays an important role in our children’s lives. Studies have shown that parents/families play an integral role in assisting in a child's learning. In more simple terms, when families are involved in their children’s learning both at home and at school, their children do better in school. A section of the No Child Left Behind Act focuses on Parent Involvement, which shows that it is not just a state concern but also a national objective. Please visit both the National (www.pta.org) and State (www.mopta.org) websites for more information and suggestions on becoming more involved in your child’s education success.

Representative Will Kraus from Raytown was also on hand to view the signing of this bill. Representative Kraus introduced this bill and was its sponsor in addition to being a supporter of Darrell and his idea. During the day’s activities Representative Kraus said, “I am proud of the collaboration that we have had with the Missouri PTA and others.” The Involvement week will not only help parents become more involved, but also help parents and teachers work together to set common goals for the students. I was glad to lend my assistance to Missouri PTA and Missouri students with this bill.” The bill was co-sponsored by Representatives Muschany, Dusenberg, Yates, Daus and Grisamore. MOPTA would like to extend a thank you to all involved in the process of getting this Bill approved.

Units Honor Parent & Family Involvement in Education Week

This year several units stepped up to the challenge and incorporated Parent and Family Involvement in Education Week into their busy PTA planned programs. Thanks to every unit who made a special effort to highlight the crucial need for parent involvement in our schools. Here are just a few examples of unit events during this special second week of September.

Walker (Ruth Oliver) Elementary School PTA teamed up with the school and held their Book Fair/Family Night on Thursday, September 11, 2008. Several service men and women were invited to the school in their uniforms to help them celebrate Family Involvement and 9-11 Remembrance.

School of the Osage High School held a Parent/Student college planning night for 10th thru 12th grade students. They felt this event would be effective in involving the parents in helping their students plan for college and understand what they need to do now to prepare. Several colleges, such as MU, Rolla and MSU, were represented. In a more broad sense, this effort also made parents generally aware of what their children need to be doing to succeed during their high school years.

Elm Grove Elementary PTA held an Ice Cream Social for their students and Grandparents. Extending the role of family involvement beyond the traditional view of just parents having a role in education.

Dads and donuts seem to naturally go together. With that in mind a Donuts with Dad event was highlighted for the week over at Blue Hills PTA in Three Trails.

Seeing this as an extraordinarily appropriate week to kick off their first PTA meeting of the year, Westridge Elementary PTA planned appropriately. They started the night in the usual manner, introducing the board and then jumped right into what their initiative, grants and goals were for the year. They made sure to articulate what the parents could do to become involved in PTA, why they should join PTA and the value their PTA brings to the school. To further reinforce the importance of parent involvement the school principal highlighted last years MAP scores, AYP and made a huge announcement. Westridge had recently been awarded the EMINT grant. Through this grant, each classroom will now have its own Motherboard. The night concluded with classroom demonstrations of this new exciting technology.

Each year Mill Creek Elementary PTA holds an Objective Night and this year they planned to have it coincide with Parent and Family Involvement in Education Week. Parents began the evening by dropping off their children in the gymnasium and Health room where free childcare was provided. The PTA made the decision to offer free childcare as a way to involve families who might have otherwise been unable to attend. A brief PTA meeting was held which included introductions to all the teachers, administrators and specialists who call Mill Creek home. Afterwards parents set off to their child's classroom. It was during this time the free childcare paid off by enabling parents to spend time with their child's teacher learning about the curriculum for the upcoming year, understanding what goals and expectations would be addressed and leaving with tools to reinforce at home what the students learned in the classroom. On the flip side students spent the time enjoying games with friends. The event was an immense success. Over 200 children took advantage of the extra playtime with their friends and both PTA and classroom teachers found themselves packed with interested parents.

2007 - 2008 Awards & Grant Winners

By Scott Jennings, Vice President of Communications

Units and Councils that are doing a great job of communicating with their members and schools through newsletters and websites.

The members of the award selection committee had a very difficult time determining two clear-cut winners for these awards that have been awarded for the third time at the Missouri PTA Convention on October 18-19, 2008 at the KCI Expo Center in Kansas City, Missouri.

The Missouri PTA Outstanding Unit/Council Newsletter Award was won this year by Liberty Oaks Elementary PTA from Liberty in the Pony Express region. Their newsletter is titled “The Lion’s Pride.” Members of the selection committee commented that it had lots of good info, had a good balance and appearance, and was consistent in its layout and content.

The Missouri PTA Outstanding Unit/Council Website Award was won this year by South Elementary PTA from Jefferson City in the Heritage region. Their website address is www.southschoolpta.com. Members of the selection committee said that the website had a great visual appearance and was loaded with lots of great PTA and parent information with some great links to other resources for their members.

Member of both of these units attended convention and presented at workshops to inform convention attendees of how they can make their communications tools more effective. If other PTA Units and Councils in Missouri would work on communication tools like Liberty Oaks and South Elementary, there are no doubts that their members would be better informed about their school’s PTA happenings and events throughout the year.

Congratulations to these two units on their achievements. We hope all units and councils throughout the state work on their newsletters and websites and apply for the 2009 award by the deadline of April 15, 2009.

SSA

Focusing on Student accomplishments, the Student Safety Award came out of the notion that it only seemed appropriate to honor outstanding individual students who use their involvement to promote a safety program. Unfortunately this year there were no entries received in this category. Does your student PTSA members know of the award? If not be sure to give them a heads up. This just might be the incentive they need to create, organize and accomplish something amazing. Something that will benefit and impact the lives of many.

The deadline for the Parent Education & Involvement Grant, Health & Safety Education Grant and Student Safety Award is April 15, 2009. Take some time to look over the programs your unit or council already offers. It is very possible you are already implementing a program that fits into one of these three grant/program be sure to apply. You deserve the recognition for all your great efforts and the check for the winners never hurt anyone’s budget.

H & S

Designed to promote the importance of health and safety in our schools and community, this grant awards those units who have designed and implemented a program based on these principles. This year’s winners are:

- First Place F.L. Skaith Accelerated PTA from the Pony Express Region
- Second Place Clever PTA in the Ozark Region

PE & I

Established in 1992 this grant was designed to help with the costs incurred by those local and council units that effectively organize, plan and hold a program/project, specific workshop, or even that educates and/or celebrates parent involvement in their school. This year’s winners are:

- First Place F.L. Skaith Accelerated PTA from the Pony Express Region
- Second Place Clever PTA in the Ozark Region

ALW

By Donna Petiford, VP Legislation and Advocacy

The AtLaw awards are designed to recognize outstanding individual and unit/council participation in the legislative process. PTA members participate in this process by keeping informed of issues that are important to children and our public schools and acting on this knowledge by attending local events, writing letters, making phone calls and personal visits, and encouraging other PTA members to do the same. Without the advocacy efforts of all PTA members, our children would not be represented in our nation’s capital or Jefferson City. We sincerely appreciate these individuals and units who made significant contributions to our Missouri PTA advocacy efforts during the past legislative session.

This year MO PTA honored Donna Petiford, Stephanie Miller and the Springfield Council PTA for their outstanding efforts and contributions to the advocacy process. Congratulations and thank you for your continued effort in making issues relating to children a top priority.

What's the Difference Between “PTA” and “PTO Today”

What is in Your ByLaws

By Linda Klender,
Missouri State PTA
Procedures & Bylaws Chairman

Did you know that the information you need for your Unit or Council is found in your Bylaws? Your Bylaws should contain the answers you need to answer most questions. If you are eligible to be an elected officer? What are the basic duties of each of the elected officers? (If you unit has more than one vice president the duties for each need to be listed). What do we charge for membership fees? How many members can we have on the nominating committee? What procedure is meeting may be conducted? How often are meetings held? When does our fiscal year begin and end? What procedure is used to make changes to our Bylaws?

Who has a copy of the Bylaws? Every member of your board should have a current copy of the Bylaws, especially the Recording Secretary.

Bylaws should contain the # portions: the basic way in which your PTA is run. If details are needed then those goes in the Standing Rules.

Bylaws are to be submitted every three years for review by the State Procedures and Bylaws Chairman. The President of your Unit or Council will receive a letter from the MO PTA three months in advance that your Bylaws are due. However, you may amend your bylaws at any time by following the procedure as stated in your bylaws. The Articles and Sections with the # sign in front are verbatim per Missouri Bylaws and may not be changed. If Missouri Bylaws should change, you should make note of the changes, but your Bylaws do not need to be amended until the next review date.

Volunteers are the cornerstones of our organization. Unlike many other non-profits, volunteers run the PTA from the top, the National PTA president, to the bottom, unit member volunteers. Put very simply, without our volunteers nothing would be accomplished. However, finding and retaining volunteers can be a tricky endeavor. Managing volunteers is both an art and a science. Strong and healthy units and councils benefit from both the individual and collective work of volunteers. As a unit or council leader it is up to you to not only recruit volunteers for various committees and tasks, but also assist and support the volunteers in place.

Working toward volunteer growth starts with the process of engaging your membership. Plan activities both formal, such as meetings, and informal, perhaps a parent’s social or back-to-school night events, to bring the members together. Take time to remind them of what your organization has to offer not only the school and their own child, but for them personally. If people identify with an organization, believe in the cause, they often want to help. Employ the ever-profitable tool of networking and get to know your membership on a personal level. How often have you heard a PTA classified in touch with interested volunteers and taking the time to first thank them for their interest, then letting them know what events are coming up around the corner and sharing some interesting details about the year’s plans.

By personally engaging with your members, skills and interests. Matching the right volunteer with the right task is sometimes the biggest hurdle. Unfortunately many people are of the mindset ‘someone else will do it’ or they don’t see how they fit into the picture. No one has impressed upon them their individual importance to the organization as a whole. And one more thing to keep in mind, never give up on the no-shows or dropouts. If your schedule looks anything like mine then you already know that some weeks don’t offer much wiggle room. Never assume a once seemingly interested volunteer no longer cares. Chances are they just might be victims of currently overwhelming commitments. Keep those individuals in the loop and also informed of upcoming events and volunteer opportunities.

Now the volunteers are rounded up and everyone is excited not only about the year but their own role in the PTA. Make sure these volunteers have the support they need to get the job done. Tasks should be specific in nature with a defined beginning and end. Keeping in mind all deadlines should be reasonable. Often written instructions will guide your volunteers, not to mention training. All jobs, whether they are paid or volunteer positions, volunteers to take advantage of regional, leadership and convention opportunities. Adopt a mentoring program with current committee heads training those who are interested in taking their place in future years. Take time to make sure your volunteer knows why they are performing a certain task, what is the purpose and history of the program. Just like we stated previously, people’s time is valuable. No one wants to feel they are performing busy work for no clear reason. If a volunteer determines their time has been wasted don’t expect them to be back.

Bring the volunteers into the planning process. You’ve heard the saying that two heads are better than one or the more the merrier. Personally invite volunteers to your meetings and let them know their input, not just labor, is important. By encouraging creative thinking among all volunteers in the planning phases your PTA benefits twofold. Volunteers become more deeply invested and your unit flourishes with new ideas. Perhaps organize social, no presser gatherings for your volunteers. Gathering in a relaxed environment allows everyone to mingle at his or her leisure and allows them to get to know other members. A little bit of fun and team building goes a long way in establishing a firm base of loyal volunteers.

Once your volunteers are up and running it is now your job to let them take charge. Sure you still need to be involved. After all, the bottom line is you are ultimately responsible for the group’s success or failure, but understand there is a fine line between support and hampering the process. If everyone is on track step back and give your volunteers the freedom to complete the tasks in a manner that best suits them. Provide feedback when the task is done instead of double-checking their every move from beginning to end.

Most importantly, something that can never be said enough times, thank your volunteers for their time and efforts. Remind each volunteer of the valuable impact they have made and how much you appreciate the work they have accomplished. Individuals who volunteer are a special breed, and they deserve recognition and respect.

In the end, the ultimate goal is to develop and foster a sense of mutual support among all in the group. PTA is not about a handful of individuals pulling the weight, but rather everyone coming to together to make the world a better place for the child. By engaging your members and focusing on their collective strengths, your PTA will benefit exponentially.
The Unwritten Code

THE EFFECTS OF THE HIDDEN ROADBLOCK IN CONNECTEDNESS WITH MILLENNIAL STUDENTS

Several years ago a school district contracted me to provide in-class motivation for a “self-contained” middle school class located in the state of Delaware. Students were placed in this class after having been deemed “highly at-risk” over and over again. Often, they spent entire school days involved in activities with no actual academic goal - simply getting them to maintain their composure was the primary task of their educator. If this was accomplished, she then attempted to teach specific subjects. This teacher was a wonderful, patient lady. She realized the difficulty of her task and still she walked into her classroom everyday with the determination to reach her students.

I distinctly remember my first day meeting her students, a class of about twenty-five or so. I always like to start new experiences with students by conducting an open-ended used to “break the ice” and connect with allow the students to talk to us and tell us whatever is on their minds. Any topic is ok. Sometimes we are shocked by what they have to say, however we realize that are only communicating what is considered normal to them. Rap sessions help us to realize that many of our students live in worlds that are far different than ours. Immediately, I noticed one student, Walter, set the tone for the entire classroom. Some might have referred to him as being large and in charge. His attitude caused a behavior of apathy towards listening and learning to take hold among his classmates. When Walter was up, the other students were up; when he was down, they were down. It became apparent to me that he was not a bad kid, he was simply using his form of authority to mask what was really taking place in his life. After I made some connection with most of the students, I knew I needed a special plan for connecting with Walter. What concerned me was finding enough savvy to build a relationship with this “leader” of the class.

This situation was, in essence, identical to the circumstances surrounding student connectedness that I’ve come across. Simply put: Youth crave a sense of significance and belonging in their lives. If someone does not help them discover these ideas for themselves, the group surrounding that teen will define it for them. If the group is negative, they will reach negative conclusions about themselves. This can start a spiral of destructive behavior, negatively impacting the student for the rest of their lives. My task in each situation is to put on the blindsers to whom I was dealing with “externally” and focus on seeing him or her “internally.” If I am moved by what I see externally in millennial youth, there is no hope for me ever changing that student - or any other student for that matter. Years of experience motivating students also helped me realize that the plethora of negative attitudes in today’s kids are driven by an outside source educators probably are not even aware of, but that most have probably sensed. This hidden source of negativity was present in previous generations and is stronger in today’s generation than in any other that preceded it. To truly reach millennials, to open new avenues of communication and to actually connect with them on a personal level, educators, parents and community leaders must crack the unwritten code.

The Unwritten Code

In this scenario it became more apparent than ever the type of unwritten code that has been established within the millennial youth community. This code has more impact than educators may be aware of. Its effects are felt both inside and outside of the classroom, and it influences decisions inside and outside the community. It highly impacts an educator’s or administrator’s ability to build effective systems of connectedness and personalization with millennial youth. Often, leaders of a group this unwritten code on a daily basis. They are a sort of “keeper of the code.” They are shaping decision-making practices of their peers, resulting in teens who feel pressured to conform. I have counseled hundreds of youth, and, time and again, found that this unwritten code has influenced each and every student, both those considered at-risk and those not at-risk. I have witnessed students that come from good homes and good backgrounds refusing to do well in school, exhibiting behavioral problems and conforming to a number of so-called “youth norms” because they respected the code more than they respected the expectations of adults who love them.

Youth are gregarious by nature and more highly influenced by the code than other age groups. While it’s true that this code has existed in some form for decades, the integration of technology has escalated during the past ten years. This has caused an increase in resources for social networking and proliferation of the code. To put a halt to this wide-spread pandemic, administrators and educators need to be on the prowl for “subliminal factors” that reinforce the code every single day:

Spotlighting of Negative Behavior in Media

All types of media, whether it’s via television, radio, internet or other mediums, are reinforcing the code among today’s students not just those marketed specifically for teens. Many popular channels in the high school demographic are ones who state that they specifically target audiences between 18 and thirty-something. Recently, on one of these stations watched by millions of teenagers, a hip documentary on drug use provided a demonstration as to the best way to use designer drugs. A teen on the show stated that you “shouldn’t throw up the drugs – you have to keep them in your system to get the best results.” In the music industry, very few mainstream releases are popular or considered successful unless it contains elements which glamorize behavior that is destructive to the listener, demoralizes women or supports rebellion or committing defiant acts. Media attention around the music or acting industry often highlight “successful living” by people who typically dropped out of school which typically is depicted in a partying and irresponsible lifestyle.

The internet is perhaps the fastest growing outlets for the “code enforcers.” Sites for online videos or images of any sort are available for any to view. Despite warnings parents have heard repeatedly over and over again, children as young as three and four years old are still being left to stumble around the internet. Social community websites have risen in popularity with tweens and still host racy ads and push adult expectations on adolescents.

Fear: The Motive for the Code

The big sister of conformity is fear - the fear of being “accepted.” Even among in the minds of millennial youth. For today’s youth, the pressure for acceptance is coming in increasingly destructive ways. I have spoken to students who dress more and more “provocatively” or in a defiant manner, including students at the top of their class. When I’ve sat down to have a one-on-one session with these students, many of them confide in me that they dress this way to do so that they can “make it through” – in other words without getting any flack or trouble for being smart. They are fearful of being “rejected” for not being like their peers. This is a first line in the code: if you want to be accepted, you don’t dare distance yourself from the group. This results in students backing away from what is considered outside the group. If there is a disdain for academics or achievement in who are acting like bad students.

There is a subset group impacted by fear, the educators and mentors who directly work with these students. Many workers have developed a subliminal “fear” of their students. Not the kind of fear related to physical harm, however one that is connected to “giving them their space.” accepting bad behavior. This ultimately has an adverse impact on the classroom and the school facility.

This unwritten code impacts just about every school, in every city and in every state. In order “crack the code” and move forward, administrators and educators must use innovative strategies designed to shift the school paradigm towards one of mutual respect and congeniality.

In order to “crack the code” and begin to establish a sense of relationship with millennial students, school leaders (administrators and educators) can use these proven strategies:

1. Look for opportunities to reach the students outside the environment where the code has the strongest influence.

I have found that this is a critical point in helping students develop a new paradigm towards educators and others in authority. The pressure in the code environment is too “pressure-filled” for the student to open up to you. Meeting in a neutral place can move you one step closer to building a trusting relationship with your student. I always encourage classroom educators to initially make it a priority to target the classroom “code” leaders with this strategy. By connecting with them, you open doors to connect with other students.

2. Make the student a part of their own change strategy

Students will shut out your efforts at connecting if they sense it is being fabricated. The educator must allow the student to come up with the answers on their own and be careful not to press too hard. Students believe their code is normal and right and that those who care about them are wrong. It will take creativity and effective listening skills to help them make life changing decisions and to connect with caring educators and administrators. They will make this connection faster and stronger if they sense they are making this decision of their own volition.

3. Help connect students to a “Positive Outlet”

If students are not given positives to replace the vacancy left by removing the negatives, they will slip back into the code expectations. Once we have broken through their barriers and have related to them personally, our students need positive reinforcement and “new outlets” in order to maintain our connection to them.

4. Personalize your interactions

I realized years ago that the most important people in a young person’s life are their family and friends. If you show you care about the important people in their lives, they will show they care about your role in their life. Students believe that most people don’t care because most people “never ask.” Find out what is important to the student and you will begin to open the door to a relationship that will be rewarding both academically and personally. The code can be cracked. Your students can change!

Cracking the code, one student at a time, you will begin to see new horizons in personalization. I have been blessed to have students I worked with reach out later just to say, “you were the one who helped me turn my life around.” Those messages make it all worth it! Utilize these principles, help your students start changing their lives, and see student connectedness become the norm in your school.
